Reduce urban traffic fatalities by 15% as opposed to an increase of 30% in a business as usual scenario.

Daily mobility alone would provide the 30 minutes of physical exercise recommended by the World Health Organisation and reduce the risk of obesity and coronary heart disease by 50%.

The number of green jobs with public transport operators would double by 2025 (provided that labour productivity increases by 1% per year) to 14 million.

Briefly describe how will this commitment be achieved (max 200 words):

UITP's call for action is aimed at governments, local authorities, investors and stakeholders, as well as public transport actors themselves, be they organising authorities, operators or industry suppliers.

Strong political will, intelligent urban planning, the right balance between private cars, public transport, walking and cycling, good operating conditions and a dynamic public transport sector: these are some of the essential ingredients needed to keep our cities moving.
